But for what's actually on the card, we should be getting some clarity on what the hell is going on with SmackDown Women's Champion Liv Morgan. Oh, and MMA legend Daniel Cormier enters the WWE ring. Or, to be more specific, he's entering the Fight Pit.

Bray Wyatt, who most think is the person behind the White Rabbit teases that have been going on for weeks, is expected by many to show up at Extreme Rules. This became more likely on Monday Night Raw, where the latest QR code led to the (opens in new tab) coordinates for the Wells Fargo Center, the location of Extreme Rules. Were he to appear during a match, we think he could show up to cause a non-finish or something similar for Drew McIntyre vs. Karrion Kross. Neither of those men should lose that match.

As for the possible main event? Liv Morgan's title defense against Ronda Rousey is an Extreme Rules match, and feels like one of the most likely to go last. Morgan's looked both like a hero and something similar to a villain lately, and we're not sure how this match will go. The storytelling is that Liv can't beat Rousey cleanly, with both her cash-in win and the SummerSlam ending where the ref didn't see her tap out. Will Liv's winning ways continue with more asterisks as she primarily wins via weapons? Only time will tell.

And with regard to Cormier, he's the special guest referee in the Fight Pit match between Matt Riddle and Seth "Freakin" Rollins. This match format, which is like WWE's octagon, has two ways to win: knockout or tap-out. The Fight Pit — at least in its two appearances so far (both in NXT) — have been in a wrestling ring surrounded by a walkway.

Here's everything you need to watch the Extreme Rules 2022 live stream:

How to watch Extreme Rules live streams from anywhere on Earth

While Peacock is available all across the U.S. and the WWE Network is still the standard around the world (though that's changing), Extreme Rules live streams can get a bit confusing. You might want to check out a VPN if you can't watch with the service you normally use.

International audiences will be pretty jealous of U.S. audiences, which will save up to 50% by switching to Peacock (unless you get the no-ads tier at $9.99 per month).
